Despite deaths constantly occurring in british prisons no one is ever prosecuted. So far this year there have been 68 deaths in prison*, last year there was 183. These figures include men, women and children, some of whom were on remand and so not convicted of any crime. The press very rarely report these deaths.

We hope to carry on what Pauline Campbell started. When ever a death happens in prison we should be prepared to bring it to the attention of the public and ultimately show that only by not sending people to prison will these deaths stop happening. If people start organising outside their nearest prison when ever a death occurs it can't be ignored for long.
